COLD STORAGE EGG INDUSTRY

Infallible Rule Is for Farmer to Mar ket Product as Soon as Possible After Laid.

(By M. M. HASTINGS.) The cold storage egg industry is a development of the last twenty-five years. Undoubtedly the industry as a whole has been of great benefit to and has tended toward the leveling of and has resulted in a large increase in means a larger total demand and a consequent increase in price.

Owing to the fact that eggs are spoiled by hard freezing, they must be kept at a higher temperature than meat and butter. Temperatures of from 29 to 32 degrees Fahrenheit are used in cold storage of eggs. At such temperatures the eggs, if kept in moist air, become moldy or musty. To prevent this, the air in a first-class storage room is kept moderately dry, which shrinks the eggs, though much more slowly than would occur without storage. The growth of bacteria in cold storage is practically prevent-stored, the growth will be checked, but activity will begin again when the eggs are warmed up. Speaking generally, the cold-storage egg, while not unwholesome, is in-ferior in flavor and strength of white to a fresh egg. The cold-storage egg can be very nearly duplicated in gross appearance and quality by allowing egsg to stand for three or four weeks in a dry room. Cold-storage eggs. when in case lots, can be told by the candler because of the uniform shrinkage, the presence of mold on cracked eggs, and perhaps, the occasional presence of certain kinds of spot rots peculiar to storage stock; but the absolute detection of a single coldstorage egg by candling is, so far as the writer knows, impossible.

With the present prevailing custom of holding fall eggs without storage facilities, it is frequently true that eggs placed in cold storage in April are superior to current fall and early winter receipts. Cold-storage eggs are usually sold viholesale as cold-storage goods, but are retailed simply as 'eggs.

The fall eggs offered to the consumer cover every imaginable variation in quality, and the poorest ones sold may or may not be cold-storage

Occasional articles have been printed calling attention to the fact that the cold-storage men were reaping vast profits which rightfully belonged to the farmer, and advising the farmer to send his own eggs to the storage house or to preserve them by other means. As a matter of fact, the cold storage of eggs has not of late years been particularly profitable, there having been severe losses during several seasons. Even were the profits of egg storing many times greater than they are, the above advice would still be unwise, for the storing, removing and selling of the farmer's individual case of eggs would eat up all possible

When eggs in the hands of large operators are properly preserved in cient methods known are in reality at the farmer's service. Because of the writing that they can be traversed by severe competition that prevails in egg storing, the farmer is paid all the increase in price which the business will stand. A comparison of the summer prices of eggs now with summer prices before days of cold storage will substantiate the truth of this state-

Use Charcoal Freely.

Charcoal should be freely used in the poultry yard. Pounded fine and mixed with the soft feed fed to the fowls, it cleanses the system of impurities. As it acts upon the blood it acts upon the life of the fowl. When the blood is thick and clotty, a dull, sick chicken will soon follow. Thin blood means vigorous circulation, and on a good circulation of blood, health largely depends. If your fowls lack activity, they need something to stir the blood out of its sluggishness. It. is best to keep the charcoal in a dry place, and when needed, grind or pound some fine and mix with soft

Turkey Growing.
Turkey growers in middle Tennessee report a very poor crop this season. Not 20 per cent. of the poultry hatched were raised, owing to the long-continued, cold while the poults were very young. All told, there will be scarcely half an average crop.

HISTORIC ROADS IN VIRGINIA HORSE TROUGH IS SANITARY

Irregular Force of Hands Past-Machines Now Help.

When the good roads movement both egg producer and egg consumer, began a few years since, a movement that now embraces nearly every counthe price of eggs throughout the year ty in the state of Virginia, Charles City county fell into line and since the fall and winter consumption. This then has kept step with the march of progress, along the plan of better pub-

I have just made a little trip over some of those greatly improved roads, and as I was preparing to take a photograph showing a section that had been worked, an automobile spun by at such a rate of speed as to make me wonder at the transformation in that same piece of road where in days gone by (not so long ago, either), it took a good team of mules or oxen to drag a load over it, writes J. M. Ball in the Southern Good Roads.

The same may be said of the majority of the public roads of this historic county-famous as the birth place of two presidents of the United States, William Henry Harrison and John Tyler, also congressmen, judges, etc., who are remembered for their good work in their separate lines. In connection with the good roads question here, it may be said that history recounts the fact that when Thomas Jefferson married the fair widow Shelton, of "The Forrest," in Charles City county, he began his wedding journey to Monticello in a coach, but before he reached his beautiful estate in Albemarle county, the coach was deserted on account of the roads (it was the month of January.) So the distinguished statesman and his bride made the rest of the trip on horseback. It was consoling to know that the wedding coach was able to traverse the Charles City roads even at that date, and that the bridal couple got past the county lines before they took to horseback.

Since that early period and along up to the past five years I maintain a certain reticence in writing up the history of the public roads of this particular section of the old commonwealth. Enough has been said of them by others, those who perforce had to travel them regularly and in all seasons. The day of the old-fashioned road overseer seems to be past; the irregular force of hands, each bound to give a day or so in labor each year to the maintenance of the roads, has past.

This county, divided into three districts, has a regularly appointed road superintendent for each district, whose duty it is to employ good teams, machinery and men to work the reads of his particular district. By this method the money furnished for read work can be expended in such a manner as to give the best results, and the work done is of not only a better but a more lasting nature.

On or near many sections of the roads there are gravel beds, and when possible quantities of this material are used, especially on pieces of clay road, which become miry in wet weather. A thick layer of this gravel and sand does wonders in solidifying these stretches. The road machines are helping much-in fact, are valuable in rounding up the roads and raising them in the center. Clearing up the timber on each side of the roads, admitting light and sun, has fried out places wet so long that up to recent date the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. Many old bridges have been replaced by new and more substantial ones, while in places terra-cotta piping has been installed for cross drains.

It is gratifying to note that in the neighborhood of two hundred miles cold storage, the best and most effi- of public highways in this county are in such fine condition at the present automobiles with safety and pleasure. while the ordinary citizen who so far has not been able to become an auto owner, can speed his nag along at the best pace of which the nag is capable without any fear of his plunging into broken hedges, bottomless mud holes or the like, provided he stays in the road. It looks today as if Charles City county, so famous as the birthplace of great statesmen, fine plantations and old-time hospitality, will soon be equally famous for its good reads and, in passing, let me say that Superintendents Adams of Harrison district. Walker of the Tyler district and Davis of the Chickahominy district are building very lasting landmarks in the way of fine roads in their respective districts. Encouraging Development

Texas, through its good roads association and State Automobile associa- that is given the road herse or the tion, is encouraging the development of highways especially for the benefit of farmers who own and drive their own motor cars-and the percentage, it is reported, of cars sold to farmers kept dry they will require nothing in this state has more than doubled in the last six months.

Day of Old-Fashioned Overseer and Device Shown in Illustration Will Provide Horse With Clean and Individual Fountain.

Not that the horses touch the iron part of the trough and leave germs there, but simply that a healthy horse one and gets the germs, spume, etc., tain, as is provided for us humans. We can't expect a horse to put his in the air, but the device that is roughly sketched herein will do the rick of giving the horse an individual drinking fountain. A is a drinking fount of sufficient size to hold a normal drink for a horse, and set high or low as deemed best for checked or unchecked horses. It is set upon a standard G that serves as a waste Inside of this is a supply pipe E and a stopped rod F. At some point near the fountain, where a horse has to place his front feet in order to drink from the fountain, would be a platform device J. not unlike a scale platform. Normally, the stopper C is in position D and the fount is dry. By a simple system of levels, etc., when a horse approaches to drink he is bound to get his front feet on J (that yields sufficiently to operate the mechanism, but not enough to bother or fuss a horse) which closes down stopper C and opens the valve in E. and as long as he stands there that valve is open and the water is running. When he leaves that position the water is closed off, the stopper rises, and the fount is empty of any residue water. Each horse gets & drink of fresh, clean water and the tank is flushed after every drink. The saving of water over the continuous running tank is also an item in its favor. Plus which, it is an anti-freez. the latter for some distance. The ing fountain. The water valve can be. grip, which may be of rubber or cork, as in most hydrants, well below freez ing and a self-drainer; and there being no water left in the tank, it is a fount that can be kept in operation all winter. And it would be a simple enough matter to so protect J that that mechanism wouldn't necessarily fill with water and freeze.

AMONG SMALL FRUIT BUSHES

fter All Danger of "Bleeding" Is Past Grape Vines Should Be Pruned -Other Details.

(By R. G. WEATHERSTONE.) With the exception of raspberries, which should be attended to early in the spring, all the small fruit bushes should be pruned, sprayed and fertilized during the late fall months. This will include the gooseberries, currents, blackberries, grape vines, etc.

After all danger of "bleeding" is past, the grape vines should be carefully pruned and all posts and trellises straightened up, which will guard against doing this work in the spring at a time it will damage them. Old straw or corn stalks make a good fertilizer here and then a goodly per cent, of common wood ashes should be supplied to furnish the desired muriate of potash, which will keep down the too rank growth, thus rough has proven a prolific means of guarding against fungous diseases and rot and giving the fruit an excellent flavor and good size.

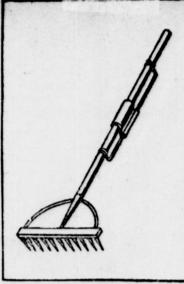

All fruit bushes or orchard trees that are where the rabbits can reach them should be wrapped in thick paper, gunny sacks, corn stalks, screen wire or the regular tree protec tors made of veneer, this protection extending 18 or 24 inches from the ground, so the snows of winter will not enable the animals to gnaw the bark from the trees.

Young and tender fruit plants should be carefully bent down to the ground, a quantity of straw placed on them and a few spadefuls of dirt carefully spread over them to protect them from severe freezing till spring, when this straw may be scattered around them for fertilizer.

GRIP ATTACHMENT TO RAKE

Device Invented by New Jersey Man Prevents Blistered Hands-Movement Is Limited.

Any person who has ever used a rake will recall, if they stop to think, that the raking was usually done with one hand. The other hand was used merely as a sliding grip to guide the implement. After a few hours of this sort of work a person who is not accustomed to it is apt to find blisters on the hand that played the guide. To obviate this a New Jersey man has designed a sliding grip that is attached to the rake bandle. A long Pumps Should be Stored in Winter Where They Will Keep Dry-Clean Them Thoroughly.

By F. L. WASHBURN, Minnesota Ex-In leaving spraying pumps for the winter see in the first place that they are stored under cover where they will be kept dry. Clean them thoroughly, taking particular pains to drain out any water which may remain in the pumps and from the jacket of the gasoline engine if power pump is used, bearing in mind that a valuable engine can be practically ruined by water being left in the water jacket and freezing.

A liberal application of engine oil to all the working parts of the engine in the fall will do much to keep off rust. Nozzle and hose should cleane out and dried. Any wooden barrels or tanks used as reservoirs should be put away from the sun preferably in a moist place.

If any insecticides are left over, put them on a shelf out of the way, properly labeled. Remember that paris green deteriorates by being kept in the open air. Arsenate of lead, which one desires to keep for the following year should have a good covering of water to prevent its drying.

CURIOUS BITS OF HISTORY

MAKING ENGLISH CITIZENS OF FRENCHMEN.

By A. W. MACY. After the fall of Quebec, in 1759, Canada passed into the possession of England. It had at that time a resident population of perhaps 100,000. A large percentage of thise were Frenchmen, who could not understand English and knew nothing of English laws and customs. Yet in making the transfer neither the French nor the English took any account of this fact. The French king ceded the country to the English "in the most ample manner and form, without restriction;" the English king proclaimed the country to be English, and that is all there was to it. There was no reservation of the French tenure of land. In all respects the inhabitants were to be Brit ish subjects, and to be treated as such. As a matter of fact this did not make much differ ence to the French Canadians, for it was hardly possible that their condition could be worse than it was already. Such an extraordinary proceeding - to transform a hundred thousand Frenchmen into English subjects by a stroke of the pen without taking their welfare in to account one way or the other.
